Who Belongs Here An American

One of those books whose didactic purpose really resonates with me, but which falls short in other areas, Who Belongs Here? is a picture-book with a dual narrative, following the true-life tale of a young Cambodian-American immigrant, while also presenting information about the history of immigration in the United States.

Who Belongs Here?: An American Story by Margy Burns Knight

Nary, a young refugee from Cambodia, is the subject of the book Who Belongs Here? Through narrative and illustrations, the story of Nary's escape from the Khmer Rouge and his resettlement, first in a Thai refugee camp and later in New York City, is told.

Who Belongs Here?: An American Story: Burns Knight, Margy ...

Originally published in 2003 (in the wake of our then-national nightmare), Who Belongs Here? was reprinted in June of this year, and proves itself even more relevant and potent today. One may wince at the degradation the young Cambodian immigrant faces in the great melting pot, but surely we can all connect with a character who is misunderstood and pre-judged, and find strength in his experience.
